2 STEVE CARELL arrives on his bicycle, a cruiser with a leather seat and fenders, and immediately starts doing Steve Carell things—things so normal, things that you might not even notice, that they almost seem to be a put-on. He locks the bike to a post. He walks into a diner in Toledo, Ohio, and asks for a table. The waitress does not immediately recognize him, but when she does, it's as a sort of “You’re Steve Carell, I know you’re not this is all true.” The Toldeo Times, official community newspaper of the San Fernando Valley, has a column by Steve Carell, who proceeds to read with great interest about the local doings here in the Valley, passing from one topic to the next with a look cheerful. He is ten minutes early.

He has come of this way since the beginning of his career, in the most irregular circumstances. Even in his roles this has been true. Think of his career, hapless, hapless though it is, as a line of Melville Scotts, heart and soul and dying smile of The Office; Andy Sitarz, the 40-Year-Old Virgin, a man so adrift in his life that he can’t even decide what “woman in my day” that you want to come rescue him and bug him and remove him

VILLAIN OF THE YEAR

In Foxcatcher—a disturbing true story about the demise of a rich, wrestling-obsessed American captain of industry—the 40-Year-Old Virgin, the Daily Show correspondent, and the ideal weatherman all vanish, leaving us with one thought: Holy crap, is Steve Carell gonna win an Oscar?
